Hello! from the BFO Office

*Don't take my grief away from me – This is the title of a book here in the Bereaved Families of Ontario (BFO) – Kingston Office –by Doug Manning. It was one of the books that leapt off the shelf for me soon after starting my position here with BFO. It has been six months since I started this creative, emotionally challenging and rewarding opportunity helping the BFO Board and its valued volunteers grow this wonderful organization.

I have lost people in my life; there is not a person alive that will take this wonderful journey through life and not suffer the loss of a loved one. I have lost my parents as a young adult, my grandparents as a child, an uncle only recently, co-workers along the way and a friend; a dear friend that left too soon.

Sadly; society, the work place, maybe those around you, who come to you only with love in their heart, want to take your grief away from you - from me. My mother died after suffering from cancer; we all knew it was coming, we were prepared, we helped her prepare and I thought we coped well -- that was almost 25 years ago.

My short time with BFO has made me realize that life just wanted me to 'push on' and 'move on'. It took me 5 years to say the word, Mom and at times, like typing this, it brings a tear to my eye. LIFE - Took my grief away from me.... I didn't share my mom with my kids, with my spouse, in my life. I buried her in my heart and only now feel that I recognize that this did not allow my grief, my mourning, my mom, a place in the journey that is my life.

The Best Way Out

Someone in the depths of grief often wonders, "When will I feel better?" and similarly, "When will I feel normal?" She or he will likely hear certain statements from different individuals such as "It's time to pull yourself together" or "Get on with your life." Both the bereaved person and the well-meaning comforter struggle to make sense of it all, to solve the problem, and to bring the situation back to what it was before the loss.

We are almost always in a hurry, expecting far too much, too soon, of ourselves. We want "out." If we could, we would simply avoid the process of grieving. The result of avoidance is that at some time in the future, we still must face the grief and work through it. As

The Best Way Out, cont'd

Helen Keller said, "The best way out is always through." Attempting to go around the grief can bring us right back where we started, to deal with all of the pain and sorrow, anger and guilt, self-pity and helplessness. All of this leads to frustration and depression, which sap our ability to function.

Make no mistake, grieving is a time-consuming, difficult process that can last one year, two years, and longer. Because of the "two-steps forward/one-step back" phenomena, it may seem that there is little or no progress. The first year is fraught with reminders of our loss, and no one can predict whether the second or third year will be better or worse than the first. That said, often we don't realize that we have indeed made progress because we tend to dwell more on the bad times than the good (or better) ones.

Some helpful advice is given in a pamphlet entitled "Giving Yourself Permission to Grieve", which is available at the Bereaved Families of Ontario, Kingston Region, office.

- "Know what to expect." Grief is not a feeling, it is a process that involves an assortment of emotions. It is a long, slow, hard journey toward letting go of someone you loved, and continue to love.

- "Befriend your grief." Try to realize and accept grief as a necessary process. The numbness, which shields you from the initial shock, wears off over time. Gradually you will work through the pain with the support of family, friends, support groups, or your faith community.

- "Let the tears flow." If you can allow yourself the luxury of crying, you will find some relief. Studies have shown that tears of grief contain specific chemicals that are natural pain relievers.

- "Vent your anger if it's there." A safe physical outlet, some type of vigorous exercise, even punching a pillow, can help release the emotional and physical tension.

- "Applaud each small step." Some days, getting out of bed is a major accomplishment. Maybe you won't get everything done that you'd like in a day or week, but try to go easy on yourself. You are doing some incredibly onerous work. Taking time for yourself, to do exactly what you want or to do nothing in particular, is allowed and recommended, as long as no harm comes of it.

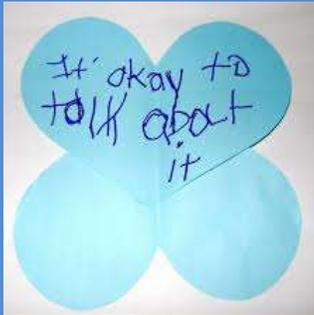

You are not alone, so reach out to family, to friends, and to us at Bereaved Families of Ontario - Kingston Region. We can help you find "the best way out" and help the healing begin.

Hello... Continued

I am learning that it's ok to be sad, tragically, ugly-cry sad when someone dies. You don't have to 'move on' and 'get on with life' in a nice tidy way so people around you and your workplace don't feel awkward.

It was ok to cry when I saw the back of a woman that looks just like my mom, even years later. It's ok to cry when I'm talking to my Aunt, who sounds just like her ☺, it's lovely actually because it's part of life, it is part of living. Grieving is part of that journey, the lovely person/people I lost, make up ME; and it's ok to be sad but it's also ok to live my life and let them be a part of that happy, fulfilling life.

I am learning that the narrative needs to change in today's society. Grief is a part of life, it is a part of the journey through life and it is ok to talk and then to talk some more because that's healthy. The valuable services provided by the caring and giving individuals that make up Bereaved Families of Ontario-Kingston Region needs to be supported, supported by the workplace and supported by the community.

My vision is to continue to grow and support you and others in the community finding their way through grief and mourning the loss of a loved one. I hope to grow our services to reach a larger geographic area, to grow our groups and one-on-one sessions and to be there when the Kingston Region needs us. I want to continue to establish ties to other community groups so that they are aware of our service - aware that we are here.

Grief can be such a lonely, isolating place; when the world gets on with life. It is so important to allow people to take their own unique grief journey and Bereaved Families is the strong, supportive organization that is here to help.

Thank you for allowing me this opportunity to work with Bereaved Families and I look forward to continuing to help and grow BFO.

Thank you for your support of Bereaved Families through events such as the Butterfly Release, our upcoming Walk to Remember in October; as well as monthly donations to this worthy and valuable organization. We hope to see you in October!

Walk to Remember

The Walk to Remember will be held on Sunday October 1st. Registration will open at 11:30 and the walk will begin at 1:00. There will be activities, raffle draws and prizes as well as a BBQ. Join us for this special event to honor your loved ones. Be sure to bring a picture / memory of your loved one to share at this wonderful event.

Pledges for the Walk to Remember help BFO (Kingston) continue is good work helping families, individuals and the Greater Kingston Area community with groups / one-on-one and outreach to community services.

A pledge sheet is enclosed with your newsletters. You can pledge online @ <https://www.canadahelps.org/en/charities/bereaved-families-of-ontario-kingston-region/> or have friends and family complete the form enclosed.

How are you going to raise money ?

Here is a suggested easy way to raise $250 dollars; an amazing amount!

If we have 75 people at the Walk to Remember pledging $250 each --- that's over $18,000 dollars for BFO – Kingston.

If we reach our goal of $10,000 BFO Kingston will purchase a commemorative bench or tree to honour our loved ones. We are in discussion with the Conservation Area to see if a bench at Lemoine Point will be possible.

What will your pledges allow BFO – Kingston to do?

Pledges raised at the Walk to Remember will allow BFO – Kingston to continue to grow programs and resources for the Kingston Community. Funding such as this will allow us to prepare and make available resources to the community. We are expanding to help service post-secondary institutions in the Kingston Area; have connected with the Seniors Association and are looking to broaden our availability to outlying areas such as Sharbot Lake, Gananoque and Napanee. Funds raised will help to pay for the development of these programs, for the brochures and pamphlets that will be made available and continue to grow relationship with partners in Bereavement Services in the Greater Kingston Area.
